“Enslavement, not seduction!”

This report is meant to give a much deeper understanding of a Shogun Method technique known as Covert Communication – or, as we'll call it, "CovertTalk."

CovertTalk is the secret language mode that women use in the more intense moments of their lives. These intense moments include:

- When they're in pursuit of their goals, whether personal, career, or otherwise

- When they're in a compromising spot where their reputation is on the line

- When they're attracted to a man and would like him to know

If you've ever complained that women are "crazy," "impossible to figure out," or that they "say one thing and mean another," then guess what – you've had your run-ins with CovertTalk. And since you felt confused and frustrated, it means you don't understand CovertTalk, much less know how to use it to your advantage.

And that's the risk you'll want to avoid. If you never learn to understand and use CovertTalk, you're setting yourself up for a difficult and frustrating love life. You'll never figure women out, they'll always be a mystery to you, and your relationships will always stand on a knife's edge.

On the other hand, when you do understand CovertTalk, then women cease to be a mystery. You'll understand them and their motivations completely, and escalating women through the IRAE Model inside Shogun Method[1] becomes near-effortless.

Let's begin by discussing the distinctions between CovertTalk and its much more common counterpart, OvertTalk.

[1] The IRAE Model is the step-by-step Enslavement procedure found inside the core Shogun Method program – https://shogunmethod.net/shogun-method/module-3/

Definition of Terms

Why are women often so hard to understand? The root reason is that men and women use two different language modes: CovertTalk and OvertTalk.

Now, if you're new to the concept of CovertTalk, then it's likely you've been using OvertTalk for most of your life.

OvertTalk is another term for "Overt Communication," or where you "say what you mean and mean what you say." Men are wired to use OvertTalk when communicating, and by default expect others, including women, to do the same.

And that expectation is the root of all the confusion and misunderstanding.

By the end of this Guide, you'll have a basic understanding of CovertTalk, as well as the beginnings of a happier love life that's completely under your terms.

Contrast that to the prospect of living like a slave to a woman you can't figure out, and you'll agree it's a good deal.

CovertTalk Vs OvertTalk

What's the difference between OvertTalk and CovertTalk?

As mentioned earlier, OvertTalk is "saying what you mean and meaning what you say." With OvertTalk, every statement made means one thing and one thing only – no mixed messages and hidden agendas here.

The goal of OvertTalk is the transfer of information. It's the "default setting" for men, but not for women.

For example, when a man says, "I can't go out tonight – I need to catch up with work," usually that's exactly what he means.

Meanwhile, when a woman says, "I can't go out tonight – I need to catch up with work," usually that's not what she means – especially if she's telling it to a man she secretly likes.

Why? This is where we go down the rabbit hole known as "CovertTalk."

CovertTalk is "saying something that can mean two or more different things."

With CovertTalk, every statement can have two different, often contrasting, interpretations. One of those interpretations is the transfer of information – its "OvertTalk version." The other interpretation reveals a hidden agenda the speaker has.

When it comes to male-female relationships and interactions, CovertTalk isn't meant to swap information. Instead, it's meant to achieve some hidden goal of the speaker. It's for that reason that it's the "default" language mode for women in the dating game.

For example, when a woman says, "I can't go out tonight – I need to catch up with work," it simultaneously means two things:

1. It could mean she does have work to do tonight, so she can't go out with him

2. It could also be a secret invitation for him to convince her to go out tonight anyway

Now, why would women communicate in this way?

Here's the thing: They don't mean to. Most women aren't even aware they're communicating so covertly. It's natural, automatic, second nature to them.

And CovertTalk been hard-wired into the female psyche by none other than society.

As you might already know, the dating game isn't fair to women. When a man approaches a woman to date or seduce her, he's called "smooth" or "a ladies' man." Meanwhile, when a woman approaches a man to do the same, she's called "slutty."

And such labels are damaging to women's lives in more ways than one. A woman with a damaged reputation almost certainly will have much lower chances of attracting strong, loyal men who got their lives together. Most likely, she'll be forced to settle for lower-quality men.

And since that's a prospect every sane woman wants to avoid, she'll do absolutely anything to protect her reputation. And CovertTalk is one of her best tactics in doing so.

Here's a common example of how this dynamic plays out in the dating game:

1. A woman meets a man at a party and she secretly feels attracted to him, but she wants to know if he's good enough to be a potential lover.

2. She knows that the more a guy can "read her mind," the more he understands women in general, and the better he'll be as a potential lover.

3. She also knows that she used OvertTalk and told him, "Let's go out tonight," she might be seen as "too forward," "too easy," or even "slutty" – so she doesn't do that.

4. Instead, she uses CovertTalk and says: "I usually stay out late on nights like this, but I can't tonight – I need to catch up with work."

5. If a man isn't familiar with CovertTalk (and with what women want in general), he'll assume she really does have to work tonight – and so he says, "Okay, some other time then?"

6. In that case, she realizes he's not good enough to be a potential lover, and so she says goodbye or puts him in her friend zone. "Yup, some other time. Nice to meet you. Bye."

7. On the other hand, if the guy is familiar with CovertTalk, he surmises she's inviting him to convince her to stay out late anyway. So, he says something like: "Hey, I need to catch up with work too, but it's not every day I meet someone like you."

8. In this case, she realizes this guy understands how women think – a one-in-a-million trait. She can then decide to stay out late with him and see where the relationship goes.

9. At any time, if she decides she does not like the guy, she can stick with the "OvertTalk version" of her statement. "No, I really have work to do. Sorry. Let's stay in touch, though."

This is how CovertTalk gives a woman the chance to approach and flirt with men without putting her reputation at risk.

So, what does this all mean for men like us?

Just this: If you want to be more successful with women, and if you want to get more of your desired results out of your interactions with them, then you have two goals:

1. To understand CovertTalk, and

2. To respond with CovertTalk, as well.

We'll cover both goals later in this Guide.

The Three Kinds of Men

In the context of understanding and responding with CovertTalk, there are three kinds of men:

1. The Ignorant, who don't understand CovertTalk or even know it exists. These men use OvertTalk exclusively and expect women to do the same. As a result, they're unsuccessful, confused, and frustrated in the dating game, and women find them shallow and unattractive.

2. The Shoguns, who do understand CovertTalk and use it to get the women, relationships, and lifestyles they want. In the dating game, they're as successful as they want to be, maintaining their relationships is effortless for them. And yes, women find them attractive.

3. The Aware, who know the existence of CovertTalk but do not know how to use or react to it, and yet would like to learn how. They look up to Shoguns and want to learn how to be that successful with women, too. Most Shogun Method practitioners, especially those relatively new to the club, are Aware and have unlimited potential.

Since you're reading this Guide, you're either Aware or a Shogun who's brushing up on his skills. In either case, what you're about to learn will drastically improve the results you get with women for the rest of your life.

The Two Elements of CovertTalk

Finally, let's look into the two elements of CovertTalk. Without these two elements, any statement made will simply be OvertTalk.

The first element is plausible deniability. Remember, the purpose of CovertTalk is to allow a woman to approach and flirt with men while protecting her reputation at the same time. Every well-crafted CovertTalk statement can be interpreted Overtly, and that Overt interpretation makes any denial she makes sound plausible.

For instance, if a woman CovertTalks a man she likes by saying: "I like you," it can be interpreted in two ways:

1. Overtly (She likes him as a friend)

2. Covertly (She likes him as more than just a friend)

Now, when a third party makes it look like she's "making the first move" – and as such puts her reputation at risk – she immediately calls attention to the Overt interpretation.

She'll retort with something like: "I meant I liked him as a friend. What are we, twelve?" Now, if the third party insists she's making the first move, they'll look bad – so chances are they won't.

See how it works? Plausible deniability – that's the first element of good CovertTalk.

The second element is subtext. There's a hidden agenda in almost everything a woman says, especially when she's interacting with a man she sees as a potential lover. If a CovertTalk statement has two possible interpretations, the second one – the version with the hidden agenda – is the subtext.

The subtext can vary widely:

- Some women may want to make new male friends they can talk to. (e.g. "I'm not really open for a relationship right now" really means "I don't want a relationship with you.")

- Others may want no-strings-attached sex. (e.g. "I love being single and independent" really means "I love doing things single people do, especially have consensual sex.")

- Still others may want a committed relationship. (e.g. "I'm waiting for the right guy" really means "Can you show me you're the right guy?")

- And still others may just want to rope you in as a sugar daddy. (e.g. "I wish I had time to socialize – I got student loans to pay off" really means "I'd sleep with you if you could help me with my student loans.")

- And still others may want to reject the guy they're talking to without sounding too mean. (e.g. "I'm glad I have you as a friend" really means "You're just a friend.")

And yet it's important to know that women who use CovertTalk tend to be interested in romance and sex. After all, if she weren't attracted to you, she wouldn't want to flirt with you, and therefore she'd save herself the energy by just using OvertTalk.

That means when a woman uses CovertTalk with you, responding in a way that pushes the conversation closer to romance and sex will generally net you favorable results.

MASTERING COVERT TALK

The key to mastering CovertTalk is in knowing who uses it and when. Here are a few helpful guidelines to keep in mind:

- Female friends, co-workers, and strangers tend to not use CovertTalk with you, and instead, only use OvertTalk.

- Women who are attracted to you tend to use CovertTalk all the time – until they stop feeling attracted to you, at which they quickly switch to OvertTalk.

- Your girlfriend or wife will tend to only use CovertTalk when she feels you're not meeting her needs. At other times, she'll use OvertTalk.

For beginners, it's safe to assume women use CovertTalk most of the time. Owing to society's unfairness to women, they tend to harbor hidden agendas more often than they don't. And as a firm rule, the more attractive a woman is, the more likely she'll use CovertTalk.

To raise your interactions' success rates with women, you'll need to achieve two goals:

1. To let her know, subtly and covertly, that you understand CovertTalk and know exactly what she's trying to say; and

2. To respond to her using CovertTalk and moving the interaction up the IRAE Model.

Since your interactions with women will vary greatly depending on your personality, approach, and desired results, let's illustrate the above dynamics with examples. The following sample scenarios should give you an idea of how to correctly use CovertTalk with women.

Example #1

The first example is when you meet a new woman for the first time, and you sense the "spark of chemistry" between you. Then, as you compliment her, she suddenly says: "You say that to all the women you meet, don't you?"

Now, why would she say such a mean, disrespectful thing like that?

The correct thing to do in this situation is to assume she's using CovertTalk. From there, you can surmise two things about her statement:

- If she meant it Overtly, then she really does wonder if you compliment all the women you meet like that – "no offense intended."

- If she meant it Covertly, then she's actually saying: "Okay, show me that you're not insecure like all the other guys."

Now, remember the three kinds of men: Ignorant, Shogun, and Aware?

An Ignorant man would assume she's using OvertTalk, and would reply with something like:

- "No, I don't do that at all…"

- Or worse: "What kind of question is that? What do you take me for?"

None of these replies help the interaction at all. In fact, they show insecurity – which is a perfect excuse for the woman to switch to OvertTalk and say, "Hey, it was an honest question – no offense intended! …But I think I get the picture, so I'll just leave you alone for now."

Now, a good response to her statement would show zero insecurity. That includes responses like:

- "No, just the crazy ones," with a smile.

- "Hey, you ask that to all the guys you meet, don't you?", also with a smile.

An even better response would show zero insecurity and move the interaction up the IRAE Model. For example, you smile at her, lean in, and whisper: "I'll answer that question when we arrive at the place I'm about to take you to. Follow me."

Example #2

If you're like most guys, you've probably had a female friend who you had a crush on. And one day, she got chummy enough with you to tell you about her love life. She might have said something like, "I'm just waiting for the right guy," and you thought it was your time to shine.

So, Ignorant you said something like: "Maybe that guy is me," or "Where do I stand in line?" or some other cringy confession – and got flat out rejected.

So, what happened?

When a woman tells you she's "just waiting for the right guy," she could mean two things:

- Overlty, she could mean she really is waiting for the right guy, and it isn't you.

- Covertly, she's secretly asking you: "Can you show me if you're the right guy?"

Covertly, if she secretly likes you, then she wants you to make the first move. And that's why confessing your feelings is the wrong thing to do – you're making it look as though it was her who made the first move, not you.

And so she switched to Overt mode, maintained the "right guy" isn't you, and things have been awkward between you ever since.

So the next time a female friend tells you she's "waiting for the right guy," here's a suggestion of what you should say:

"Hey, me too. I'm waiting for the right girl for me. Right now I'm just meeting people, listening to their stories and telling them mine, and enjoying the journey. Like us…" (point a finger at her, then to yourself) "…we're friends right now and that's great, but if we ever became more than that, that's great too. It's the journey, and I'll enjoy it no matter what."

Can you sense the CovertTalk in that statement?

With it, you're making it look like you were the first one to suggest becoming "more than friends." And as a result, she'll play along with the idea much more eagerly.

Recap

You've just been introduced to the rabbit hole known as CovertTalk. It's the default language mode that women use in the dating game, and understanding it is crucial to success with women.

CovertTalk stands in stark contrast to OvertTalk, which is the mere conveyance of information. CovertTalk can convey information and influence other people to achieve the speaker's goals. And for women, their ultimate goal is to find a strong, dominant, high-quality man… while not appearing too forward or too "slutty" at the same time.

With its two "ingredients" – plausible deniability and subtext – CovertTalk helps women achieve their dating goals and more. This is because only the smartest and most experienced men are aware of CovertTalk, know why it exists, and know how it works.

If you're not one of those men, then you'll risk living your life as an Ignorant. You'll never know what women actually mean with the things they say, and you'll always be confused.

It's only by understanding CovertTalk will a woman's language start to make perfect sense to you. And only when women make sense to you will you know how to communicate with them… and thereby giving them what they most desperately want in the dating game – a strong, dominant, high-quality man who understands them completely.

This Guide just opened your eyes to CovertTalk. Now go out there and see how much clearer and less confusing women are. You'll never see women the same way again.

CovertTalk is one technique inside the entire Enslavement ammunition pack that you find inside Shogun Method. Use the entire IRAE Model arsenal and you will have the powers to put any woman under your domination and control – believe it 🈯
